“ Sue, you know what your mom meant to me. Aunt Imelda was like a second mother who had the patience of a saint and taught me so many things during all of those summers I babysat for you and your sibs.
It seemed that every single morning she would quietly meet me at the back door and explain what had happened the day before, and who I should expect to arrive that day to fix it.
Some of the ones that stand out in my memory:
"Kathy, you can't put really light items into the dishwasher. ( holds up insides of coffee pot) The repairman will be here this afternoon and I will be a bit late coming home as I have to stop and buy a new percolator coffee pot,"

"Kathy, you can't dump an entire bucket of water on the kitchen floor when you mop, no matter how dirty it gets. The repairman will be here this afternoon to replace the ceiling tiles in the basement."

"Kathy, you can't put the waffle iron onto the soapy dishwater and let it soak to remove the stuck on batter. Let me explain what non submersible means."

"Kathy, did you realize that you vacuumed up an entire baby blanket? That's why the vacumme will no longer pick up dirt."

I laugh now, but she never got angry, never raised her voice, never acted like she was disappointed with me...everything was a lesson. She was so good to me and she will be missed.
